CHAPTER I.

THE BALL OF THE OPERA-A CURICUS REN-

It was in November, 1851. I had been wandering over the continent for years, with no particular aim or object—I had nothing, in fact, to do in the world, except to kill time, until that old mowerdown of humanity should be ready to kill me. That generally tedious and desperate avocation had been for more than a year, however, a good deal lightened by a course of political events in France.-Most of my friends in that kingdom were like myself, sturdy republicans, and I can afford to confess now that, I have no apprehension of finding a mouchard always at my elbow, I was pretty deep in their secrets and their schemes.

So it was in November, 1851, that I came back to Paris, and reinstalled myself in my old lodgment au premiere, rue

St. Honore, No .-

The evening of my arrival, the first Bal de Popera opened its fascinations to the multifarious throng of pleasure seekers who crowd its doors and intoxicating hall. Unmasked, and in simple habit of "gentilhomme," I dropped in about mid-night. The ball was at its height, or rather under full headway of that giddy elevation which it commonly reaches about the small hours. I idled about, and bore with proper flegm the assaults of an indefinite number of travestied young women of the quartier latin, not less malicious than beautiful—till I grew weary of being the butt of a persiflage, agreeable enough to novices, but stale to an old habitue like myself, Wearied with it, after a little while, therefore, and recognizing none of my friends anywhere among the surging and whirling crowd, I went and sat down in one of the boxes, resolved to watch the scene below a while, and then go home and go to bed like a good boy, before daylight.

I had not been long seated ond person came in also, and sat down in the opposise corner of the box. I looked, of course, and saw that it was a woman. Women being the "feature" of the place, however, and I in rather a crusty humor, I took no farther notice of her. I expected that, as usual, she would launch at me some of the ordinary challenges to conversation; but I was mistaken. So, after waiting sometime in a dead pause, I began to feel a little curious to know what could be the reason for such an anomaly as a silent Frenchwoman at the Bal de l'Opera. I drew back in the box a little, therefore, and fell to examining her carefully. She was completely enveloped in a black domino, and closely masked. There she sat, half screened by the curtain, and peering down fixedly on the moving crowed below-and motionless as a statue. A delicate and rounded hand, perfectly gloved in white kid, rest-ed upon the ledge of the box. That was all, however, that could be seen, by which to form a surmise as to her character or looks. There was not a bow of ribbon about her dress, ner even a stray curl peeping out beneath her hood, to mark her for recognition. Neither, as she sat there, could you form any idea of her figure beyound the fact that she was certainly not a large woman. Even he eyes showed through the holes in he mask only like two little points of light; for the holes were smaller than usual, and evidently meant to conceal their size and character. There was, in fact, not a shade of coquetry about her dress or herself.— And that fact Piqued my curiosity in a manner which the most elaborate attempt at fascination would have failed to do. Directly, however, she drew from under her domino her other hand, and this held in it a little handkerchief. As she raised it, apparently with an involuntary motion of habit, to where her lips should be, but the mask was, she was attracted by something in the crowd below, and leaned over the front of the box. As she did so, the handkerchief fell from her hand. Her agitation at this was so marked that rose instantly, and said:

"There is no necessity of being agitated. If Madame will remain here, I will ring it to her in a moment."

The lady bowed, and I went off on my errand. I had no difficulty. A gentleman, who had picked it up, was standing at the same spot, and returned it to me at once. I went back much more slowly than I had descended, and took the chance of examing the fairy webb of lace by the way. It was a marvel of manufacture, and perfumed with one of those delicate, half scents which I own always suggests to me an idea of good taste and distinction in the user. There was neither cipher nor mark upon it, but tied in one corner was a little gilt key. That accounted for the lady's agitation. There could be no mistake about its use. It was the key of a "Brahmah" lock, and that lock I resolved at once was on the lady's writing desk. If that key could only have talked!—but it was only a gilt key, and no key to the mystery of the lady, or the lady's writing desk.

I regained the "loge," shut the door, and presented the rescued "estray." She received it, and thanked me in a very low sweet voice. I thought her accent was a little foreign—not, in fact exactly "Parisienne,"—but the voice was certainly charming. At any rate, the ice was broken; and as the lady did not offer to speak, I did. So I said:

"You do not come here, I see, fair masque, for the same purpose as the common crowd. You are not gay. You are, in fact, sad and distrait. Are you afraid of this noisy crowd, or of me?"

The lady turned half towards me, and said in the same tone of voice, but through which, I fancied, pierced a touch of irony: "I know you too well, Monsieur, to be afraid of you."

"Ah!" said I, laughing, "you are a fortune-teller." "No," said she in the same low half-mocking way. "That is not necessary. Without being a witch, I can easily convince you of my knowledge. For instance: you came to Paris to day direct from Rome. You were accompanied only by your servant, a negro, venerable, grey, and pompous. You drove first to the Rue Vaugirard to call upon a friend. From there you went to the Ministry of Police and registered your name, and received permission to reside in Paris. It was a wise act.

This was said with an emphasis that mcde me shiver a little, and fancy that perhaps the "iron" hand of the police was under that particular gant de valeur.

"From there," she continued, "you lady knew too much. "But in your role of prophetess you ought to know the past and future, as well as to-day. We have met before." "Yes."

"Where?"

"In Italy, in England-everywhere."

"You are my good or evil genius?"
"That will be as you make it."
"How can I control it?" said I hastily.
"The good genius has been with you," iid she, slowly and almost solemuly. said she, slowly and almost solemnly, "for three years. I have determined to protect you. I have done it."

"How?" said I, with a little anger; for I hate to be mystified, and began to think she was carrying the joke to far even for an opera-ball pleasantry. "How and

"In Rome, when you conspired with Mazzini. You were discovered. You received a note, warning you of your danger. and fled in time. That note was mine.—At the bloody field of Navarra. You fought and fell. Insensible, you were carried from the field to a neighboring Podere. My servants carried yot—it was by my orders. While insensible, or wild with the fever which followed, I nursed you-it was my mission."

I began to be in a new fever.

"If," I cried, "I am under so many obligations to you, you will not be so cruel, so heartless as to wear that mask any longer. You have told truth enough to make me believe all true you tell me.— Let me at least learn to know who lowe so much to."

"Mr. Heyward,"—I started again, for that was my name indeed—"Mr. Heyward," she said coldly, "does not know me. It is not probable he ever will.— My face would be strange to him. This I tell him upon my honor. But he can-not see it."

"But, Madame"-

"Sufficient sir," she said, haughtily; such is my will. Know, however, that I came here to-night purposely to meet you, and to tell you that on condition of obeying me implicitly, we meet again."

"Madame," said I, now completely under the dominion of this strange creature, I promise implicit obedience. Allow me to see you again—often again—and no slave shall be more absolutely obedient."

"Do so," she said, "and I promise you"

"A little love?" said I, with a pardon able impulse of vanity yielding to the suggestions of the place and time.

"No," she replied, in a quick, hard tone, altogether different. "The love of man to woman is a thing common, and generative of the common of t ally worthless. I promise something bet-ter—friendship and protection. You will

Here she rose, and said:

"Mr. Heyward, I must now leave you, I forbid you to leave this box until fifteen minutes after myself. You have given me your word as a gentleman, to obey me. Keep it, and you will have reason to congratulate yourself on your good faith. Break it—even in thought and this is our last meeting."

When I turned she was gone.

CHAPTER II. A CRIMINAL AT THE CONFESSIONAL.

about me; second, I feld too much interest about her to be comfortable. I was resolved to see her again, and probe the matter to the bottom—to find out all about her, and make her tell me all she knew about myself or—what "or?" That I did nt fill up. Full of my purpose, I haunted overy public place for a week, in vain; not a sign of my tormentor was to be seen. Perhaps I had seen her really a thousand times during that period, and did not know her; for I had seen only a a hand gloved, and Paris is full of little hands and perfectly-fitting white gloves. So the last day of the week, I came back to my lodgings, weary and savage, threw my cane one way, my hat another, and lastly my eyes on the table—and a three cornered note. I pounced upon the note and tore it open. It contained two

"My carriage will call for you to-night, at ten o'clock. LE GANT BLANC." From that hour till ten, I confess, seemed ten ages; but ten came at last, and so did the carriage. I shall not un-dertake to describe the curious mixture of sentiments with which I took my place in it, and found myself beside a gigantic negro; but I was in for the adventure, whatever it might result in, and braced my nerves for all haps and hazards But, in truth, I really did not apprehend danger as one of the results of the adventure. The lady had professed to have done me too much good at odd times-such as in Rome, at Navarra, &c., -and I believed her too well to be at all alarmed. My agitation, therefore, was rather the nervous excitement of hope than fear. During the ride, the negro was as silent as his mistress had been .-The carriage was closed; the curtains drawn; I could not see where we went. Only, after a while, I knew, by the sound of the wheels, that we had left the pavement of the city, and were riding over a country road. At last, after an hour's ride, the carriage stopped at the garden door of a large country house. The night was pretty dark, and I could merely see by the outlines, and those vague and wavering in the obscurity, that it was a handsome chateau, apparently quite old. My guide opened the gate, and led the way, by another side door, into the house. Following him closely, I came to an inner door, which he opened, and, closing behind me, locked, and left me standing alone. I listened, and heard him descend the stairs and, I fancied, go out of the

Then I began to look around me. The chamber into which I was introduced was furnished luxuriously, and dimly lighted by an argand lamp, in silver frost work, hung in the centre. A profound silence reigned everywhere about it. Directly, however, a door, concealed by curtains of pink silk, opened, the drapery was put aside, and the unknown entered-

I was about to throw myself at her feet, and utter some of the common places of passion, which all this scene naturally suggested; but she drew back haughtily, and, with the air of a queen, motioned me to a seat. I obeyed; in fact, I could not help obeying, her air was so imposing .-She also sat down opposite me, upon a small Grecian couch, and faint as the light was, I could now see that, whatever her face might be, her figure was faultless as the white gloved hand which first attracted me. She was in demi-toilette, and a Spanish walst and full sleeves permitted to be seen an arm and neck white and round-all that lover the most passionfact, or critic the most fastidious, could desire.

I attempted to be gallant and affectionate. She stopped me instantly—not harshly but decidedly -saying:

"I told Mr. Heyward, when we met last, that I knew him; I sent for him tonight to prove it, not to hear professions of love. Those are the common coun of our daily life. I have something more important for you."

"Madame, or Mademoiselle," said I, "whichever you may be, for Heaven's sake tell me what you know of me, and believe me, my most sincere desire is that you may know or think nothing which will prevent your accepting from me more than a common profession".

"Of love?" said she.

I bowed and laid my hand to my

"Mr. Heyward," she continued, "I am a woman of condition. I am young. My life has been irreproachable, and—I will be frank with you-I love you. Stay approach me, offer to rise, even, till I bid you, and I disappear."

I sat down again, more and more puz-

"I am frank with you," she continued; are you so with me?

"By heaven!" I commenced.
"No oath!" she said, quickly—"no oath, sir, or you may be twice forsworn."

"What do you mean ?" I cried. "How can I be forsworn? Move you—madly, foolishly. I have loved you from that first night-loved without ever seeing your face. True, I cannot conceive it to be less beautiful than all your jealousy, or what you please, does permit me to form an opinion of. But this mystery, this strange vagueness, mixed with so much I know to be real, at once charms me. I hear you speak, and the tones of your voice are so gracious, so full of music, that it seems to me I never heard a melody comparable to that voice. You move, and the careless grace of every change en-chants me. At last, you complete my intoxication by telling me that you love me; and when, carried away with so much happiness I would throw myself at your feet, you recall my promise—you check me—you are cold, haughty, distant: you are no longer the being you feign, but a strange contradiction, whose only real purpose seems to torment and mystify me.

"And why not ?" she replied, bending forward, and fixing those points of light, which shone through the eye-holes of her mask, upon me, as if they had power to penetrate, and dart their light into my very soul-"Why not? I confess I love you. I have a right to do so, for I am free and honest. You offer me love in return—you, who are neither kind of love, Mr. Heyward?"

"Of my whole heart, my soul, all my being!" I cried enthusisatically.

"Indeed!" she continued, in the same tone of mingled passion, anger, and mockery. "He tells me that. He offers to make me all these. And because I, a wo man who loves him, who have loved him for years, and, unknown, unseen, unsuspected, have followed him day by day, guarded him in danger, nursed him when wounded, sick, without a friend-I, who confess that my love for him is my life-I, who own so much of woman's weakness as to admit that to converse a little with him, to see at last, face to face, the man for whom I have done and felt all this, I take these strange means of meeting-he offers to make me his-what, sir, what ?" she exclaimed, rising, and standing before me with folded arms, her bosom swelling, and her head thrown back, the very impersonation of superb scorn so perfect that, although the mask hid it, I know, as well as if I saw it, how her cheek flushed and her lip curled—"What? You dare not answer. Married, James Heyward, six years ago, in the United States. Your wife is still alive there, and yet you dare talk to me of love, and offer me-what? what, as the reward of mine? Dishonor, remorse, infamy! See, James Heyward, the difference between us: my love in all its devotion, all its disinterestedness, has been the love ofa woman; yours, in all its selfishnessa man's. She sat down, and leaned her head upon her hands.

I also sat for a little while, silenced and confounded by the energy, the character, at once tender and daring, passionate and full of principle, of this "terrible woman." But, alas! everything she did, from its very unusualness, from its being out of the common track so utterly, only fascinated and chained me the more hopelessly at her feet. And as she sat there, so motionless after her fierce accusal, she seemed to me to be, as it were, a judge, having the right to condemn, the power to pardor, to whom I was under an absolute necessity of lying open all my past life, as a defence of what I had done and thought since that first evening at the op-ora-ball. I obeyed the impulse and told the story of my life; "as truly as to Heaven, I do confess the vices of my

> CHAPTER III. MY CONFESSION.

It will be remembered that, at the conclusion of the last chapter, I felt myself absolutely compelled to lay open all my past life to the "terrible woman" whose indignation I had so unexpectedly aroused. Thus I commenced:

"You say that I am married; I confess that it is so. I confess, also, all the wrong I have done you in my thoughts; but you do not know how great my excuse—

"I have not asked you to excuse, to defend yourself," said she mournfully, and without raising her head : "I have asked only how you dared to insult, to humiliate me; and I was wrong to ask even that, for I have invited it—I have laid myself open to it by my own weaknes.

"You will let me make what reparation l can," said I; "if not for yourself at least for me! You are too generous to refuse.

She bowed her head slightly, as if to say "Go on sir, if you insist upon it, I must bear it."

"Madame," said I-"I am an orphan, and I have no husband!" said my mysterious tormentor, in a low but very marked tone. To be continued.

ניסן ..... Saturday 24. 1705 ...... 1st days, Sat. Sun., April. 7, 8 latter days, Friday Saturday, April 13,

The Richest Man in England, in refference to the San Francisco Bulkhead Affair.

The following items applied to the Bulkhead case, is illustrative of the consequences that the passage of that bill must have for the city of San Francisco. We copy from the "Spiritual Age:"

"The Editor of the Philadelphia Press says the Marquis of Westminister, formerly Earl Grosvenor, is the wealthiest man in Great Brittain. His property, mostly real estate in London, and the counties of Cheshire and Dorsetshire, is estimated at about £21,000,000 sterling, equal to one hundred millions of dollars. More than half that sum has accrued within the last fifty years; and it is constantly increasing by the reversion of buildings which have been constructed in conformity with ground leases. A large tract of land in Westminister, stretching from the House of Parliament to Chelsea, was purchased by the Grosvenor family for a trifle. By degrees, as London increased, particularly spreading in the West, as most great cities do, this island, swampy and barren as it was, came into request for building purposes. Buckingham Palace was built upon this ground, and many new squares and streets, the habitations of the rich and fashionable people, have been laid out on it. The Marquis is described as a mean, miserly fellow; his income is over three million dollars a year, and in all probability whoever posesses the estate half a century hence, will have a yearly income of from five to seven millions of dol-

There are many others of the landed aristocracy of Great Britain who have enormous incomes. The Earl of Fitz-william, who died last summer, had an ncome of a million dollars a year .-He has left to his youngest son estates which produce an annual income of $100, 000, and to the second son an income of $150,000, while the eldest son, the heir of the coronet; is limited to a rental of $150,000, instead of $200,000 per annum, upon which his father supported the dignity of his great name in the north of England. There are also a great many commoners who rank in wealth with the nobility. Mr. Muntz the inventor of the Muntz yellow metal used very generally for sheathing ships, died a few months since, and left a for-tune of over $10,000,000."

square inch on Broadway, New York 100 feet in depth being worth at the present time about $40 for one-sixteenth part of an inch; $80 a quarter inch; $330 an entire inch; $4,000 a foot; $100,000 for a decently fronted lot; $250,000 for a moderate show, and about $1,000,000 for a "splurge."

The loss by fire in the United States in 1859, is estimated at sixteen millions of dollars. In 1859 it waseleven

The Patrimony of St. Peter, Pepin, and the Pope.

At this juncture it may not be amiss to inform a number of our readers of the manner in which the successor of the of the humble fishermen of Galliea came to be the ruler of the "Eternal City"-We quote from Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History. Part II. chapter 7:

"We see in the annals of the French nation the following remarkable and shocking instance of the enormous power that was, at this time, vested in the Roman pontiff. Pepin, who was mayor of the palace to Childeric III. and who, in the exercise of that high office, was pos-sessed, in reality, of the royal power and authority, not contented with this, aspired to the titles and honors of majesty, and formed the design of dethroning his sovereign. For this purpose, the states of the realm were assembled by Pepin, A. D. 751: and though they were devoted to the interests of this ambitious usurper, they gave it as their opinion, that the bishop of Rome was to be previously consulted, whether the execution of such a project was lawful or not. In consequence of this, ambassadors were sent by Pepin to Zachary, the reigning pontiff, with the following question: 'Whether the divine law did not permit a valiant and warlike people to dethrone a pusillanimeous and indolent monarch, who was incapable of discharging any of the functions of royalty, and to substitute in his place one more worthy to rule, and who had already rendered most important services to the state ?'-The situation of Zachary, who stood much in need of the succor of Pepin against the Greeks aed Lombards, rendered his answer such as the usurper desired. And when this favorable decision of the Roman oracle was published in France, the unhappy Childeric was stripped of his royalty without the least opposition; and Pepin, without the smallest resistance from any quarter, stepped into the throne of his master and his sovereign. Let the abettors of the Pa-pal authority see, how they can justify, in Christ's pretended vicegerent upon earth, a decision, which is so glaringly repugnant to the laws and precepts of the divine Saviour. This decision was solemnly confirmed by Stephen II. the successor of Zachary, who undertook a journey into France, in the year 754, in order to solicit assistance against the Lombards; and who, at the same time, dissolved the obligation of the oath of fidelity and allegiance which Pepin had sworn to Childeric, and violated by his usurpation in the year 751. And to render him his title to the crown as sacred as possible, Stephen annointed and crowned him, with his wife and two sons, for the second time.

"This remarkable event is not, indeed, related in the same manner, by all historians, and it is generaly represented under the falsest colors by those who, from a spirit of blind zeal and excessive adulation, seize every occassion of exalting the dignity and authority of the bishops of Rome. Such writters assert, that it was by Zachary's authority, as pontiff, and not in consequence of his opinion as a casusit or divine, that the crown was taken from the head of Childepic, and placed upon that of Pepin .-But this the French absolutely and justly VALUE OF BUILDING LOTS IN NEW crime of the pontiff would have been YORK.—Land is said to be worth $3.0 in the greater than it was in reality."

> TRANSMIGRATIONISTS. A curious new sect of Christians, called Transmigrationists, have of late become very numerous in France. Quite different from the mormons, their character is highly moral, and their creed Christian, only they include all animals in their idea of universal im-mortality. They profess to believe that being changed after death into some animal will be their purgatory. In Germany their increase is immense. - Christ. Enq.

The Italian Question, and Romanism.

Mr. Richard Deasy, a Catholic gentleman, in his protest against the demonstrations of the Irish, roused by the agitating clergy, writes as follows:

The Pope's Sympathizers.

ROMANIST GENTRY DISSENTING FROM THE PRIESTS.

The Cullen party has continued its demonstrations in favor of the Pope; and addresses of condolence have been adopted by mobs at Clenmel, Mallow, and Galway, and other places. It is worthy of remark that the Roman Catholic laity do not give support to the Cullen agitation, by the Archbishop of Edinburgn). Mr. Shine Lawler, of Kerry, Mr. Richard Deasy, of Cork, have added their protests to those of Lord Castlerosse and Michael Barry. The last named gentle-man has inserted in the Conk Reporter, a masterly sketch of the legations, and the causes of their revolt from the sovereignty of the Pope.

"Let it be remembered," he concludes "that I advocate no active interference in behalf of the Pope's revolted subjects; if he can compel them to return to their allegiance, let him do so. If a State cannot rely on its own resources to suppress insurrection, It must be in the wrong. It is sought to establish some analogy between the case of Ireland and that of Romanga. What is the evidence that we find of this analogy? The Legation elects 124 representatives, who unanimously repudiate the Government of the Pope. Ireland elects 105 representatives, of whom not a dozen can be got to condemn even those acts of British legislation that are alleged to be most injurious to her. Ireland shows all the institutions of a free State; the Romanga was ground to the dust in servitude. Ireland has not one foreign soldier on her soil . Romanga has groaned for ten years, under foreign military rule. Sixty years ago, when law and order were maintained by the triangle and the gallows, the condition of our Ireland might have somewhat resembled that of the legations under Papal rule, but not since then.

"Are Irishmen, then, to sympathize with the Pope? are they to help in crushing the liberty, of the Legations? That is their affair, not mine. I speak not of the poor untutored serf, sent from his plough or harrow to shout at the great country meeting, in the belief that he discharges a high religious obligation, but of the Roman Catholic gentleman, who has been taught to use the faculties that God has given him to distinguish between right and wrong—between justice and injustice. If the nations of the world conclude that Ireland has given her sanction to the continuance of Papal misrule in Italy, it is on them that the shame will rest. As yet we have heard nothing but specious fallacies and fanatical rant. Let no Irish Catholic excuse his treason to free principles; in taking part with the Pope on the ground of religious obliga-

THE POPE, DIGNITY. —It is reported that at the Pope's public reception of the Jewish deputation, he twitted them with some sneers to this effect :- "He, he! what is he doing your own dear Momolo? (Mortara). Has he got to the Congress yet? and is he very sanguine about his success as a diplomatist?" with some other not over good-natured remarks of the same kind, with which the Holy Father continued to wound the feelings of the obsequious Israelites no less than three times during an audience of about ten minutes. Ro. Cor. of the Times.

ITALLIAN AFFAIRS.—Additional foreign news by the Europa indicater a widening of the breach between Rome and the Liberal powers of Europe. The Pope has made another speech hostile to France, and it is rumored that Victor Emanuel is to be excommunicated.

The Papal System.

The eulogies bestowed by the clerical nals on the mildness and justice of the Government have naturally roused the h nation of those who are acquainted will atrockty of the system, and the co are daily new disclosuaes of papal e by the Italian and French press. We one of these accounts from the "Arch elites," which assures us that the c of the facts as stated, has been testified eye-witnesses, on whose veracity the hi reliance can be placed :-

At Cento, a city in the Papal States, ived some years ago a trader, whose escaped our memory, a husband and has His buisness prospered, and he required assistance of a clerk. The trader was a and so were his wife and children Jew

The clerk was young and so was his w She became unfaithful to her husbani having discovered this, pardoned the of his children, but dismissed the clert, went to Bologna.

The trader, leaving his faithless wife a fate, only wished to recover his children whom he owed the duties of a father, and this pufpose took legal proceedings is court at Bologna, taking cognisance of matters.

Several months passed before judge was given. In the meanwhile the add got baptised, and had the two children wise baptised. Judgement was at last to the effect, that since Catholic children not be brought up by a Jew, the dema the father could not be granted. But father owes his children food, lodging and cation, he is to make to his wife an annu lowance of 1200 livres. Of course, the hristianity does exactly the same: the res of Jesus and the Apostles, are con-nually held before the church. "All cripture is given by inspiration from od, and is profitable, for doctrine, for proof, for correction, for instruction in ghteousness. 2: Tim. 3:6. So far the achings of Religion: We make the same plication of philosophy: the true masopher studies the lives of the anents and copies their wisdom; if not ways in its ancient form, at all events principle. All our learned men studd the classics.

Had the rophets and Apostles lived in our days, justice, a ey also would have gone teaching from ty to city, and from house to house : ut a Jonah, instead of walking through mevel and preaching in her streets ould send circulars and tracts to preare their minds, to warn, to instruct, d to correct. The Prophets and Aposs are no more; but their followers conmue their work and copy their ways in rinciple they are editors and publishers: e have Bible and Tract societies; we are religious papers and periodicals and sar as these publications are Scriptural hiphilosophical, those who print and irelate them, are but printers and publishers, while Moses, Daniel and Jonah re the editors. Thus, when folly calls om the hills; wisdom may raise her office in the streets.

But on the other hand, while we study nd copy the ancients, we do so only as was they were wise and their lives forthy of imitation.

We do not copy them on account of their antiquity; for we follow the advice. I the moderns likewise, under this conition we imitate them on account of their implicity, purity, and, sound wisdom.— We also must remember that some cenuries back, the ancients were moderns; nd that their wisdom is none the worse. or their weakness the better for aving grown old. And, in fact, as Baon already remarked: We are the an-ients; for having lived so much longer han those who lived centuries ago, we re the ancients. And the experienced practical philosopher and the divine philosopher know, that in some matters the ancients had the preference before us; while in many others we are considerably in advance of them. But, regarding frivolous dancing the ancient and modern philosophers and divines occupy the same platform. Moses and Socrates; Spinoza and Lord Bacon, are not the men whom we find in Ball-rooms-though they knew to enjoy the true pleasures of

"You are my Sweet heart."

Parents, do not allow those ignorant men who visit your houses, and make up in idle talk for a deficiency of solid thought, early to confuse your children of three, four and six years of age, by talking to them of sweet hearts, marrying, and similar nonsense. The child connects no idea with theset erms. Still, it combines with them the idea of something very joyful and good. Early impressions are lasting; and you thus allow early to turn the childs mind upon certain thoughts, the forrunners of certain passions which nature purposely de velopes slowly and gradually.

The Dead Killing the Living.

Christian theologians, in their anxiety to free the Gentiles from the supposed anbearable yoke of the law, and in their fear lest these should seem to Judaise, abolished the greater part of Mosaical Not even the Ten Commandments were spared, for the heaven-appointed seventh day Sabbath was declared not to be binding upon the Christian world. God distinctly forbade to bring any corpse into the sanctuary or within its precincts. But the theologians unhesitatingly declared that the Gospel had freed the Christians from all such ceremonial enactments. We now, without further comment, quote the subjoined portion of Dr. Letheby's last report on the sanitary condition of the city: "All the city churches, 71 in number, have been carefully examined, and whenever it has been practicable, we have made a personal inspection of the public The general result of our inquiries may be expressed in few wordsthat every available space beneath flooring of the churches has been used for ages as the depository for the dead, and it passes belief how large a quantity of putrifying matter has in this way been disposed Even now, the vaults are, in some cases, gorged with corruption, and all along the aisles and porches of the sacred edifices, are graves filled with human remains. In most instances, the only partition between the living and the dead is a thin slab of stone, and a few inches of earth. These offer but a very imperfect barrier to the escape of noxious effluvia; and slowly, therefore, but incessantly, the gaseous products of decomposition are into the atmosphere of the church. But at the night services, or during the winter season, when the air is sarefied by the warmth of the fires, or burning gas, the rank vapors are drawn out in uncontrolled profusion. It is impossible to say what mischief has been done by thio, and how many, while wor-shipping within the sanctuary, have breathed the atmosphere of corruption, and have sickened unto death." - Have the theologians rightly interpreted the Gospel, when they taught the Christians that the dead might poison the living whilst in the act of worshipping God?— Truly conventional Christianity has much to answer for, for having so wantonly set aside the clearest commandments of God, declaring them to be, on their authority, mere ceremonial laws .- Jewish Chroni-

CONSTANTINOPLE.—THE SCHOOL.—We are pleased to learn from a letter in the "Archives Israelites" that the congregation is perfectly agreed. The school as now re-organized gives complete satisfaction to all parties, the chacham basha giving it his full patronage.-The Rabbis are cordially co-operating. It appears that the opposition raised at one time was more against the head master, who was charged with neological tendencies than against the school itself. May the work of education prosper in the capital of Turkey .-

Austria,-The late concessions have bee received with distrust and displeasure. Full equality of rights having been granted to He brews already in 1848, and taken from them at once, what guarantee have they that the new concessions will be permanent. Besides, by declaring a few obsolete laws cancelled, it implies the greater number of others to be in force yet; and this is bad enough. Lastly, what confidence is at all to be placed in that treacherous government.

PARIS.—DEATH OF M. ALPHONSE CERFBEER -The "Archives Israelites," in announcing the death of this gentleman, who was brother of M. Max Cerfbeer, the president of the central consistory of Paris, and a captain in the army, says in the obituary that it was the deceased who, after the July revolution in 1830, obtained from the Government of Louis Philippe the complete recognition of the rights of the French Jews, which then for the first time, were entered in the charter (Carte). Ever since the Jewish worship was placed precisely on the same footing with all other religions recognised by the State. All the Cerfbeers, it appears from this notice, held and hold high office in the State. The deceased since 1852, receiver of finances, another brother, Edward, is military intendant, Bastia, and Fredric, now dead, was Consul of France, at Hyati. Our cotemporary speaks in the highest terms of the deceased, and of the services. rendered by him to French Judaism whilst a member of the central consistory.—Jewish Chronicle.

THE CANARINS .- This tribe which inhabits the coast of Malabar, offers a strange spectacle to the observer. The Canarinz have no particular religion of their own, but follow the different religious ceremonies of other tribes living around them, believing thereby that they follow the true and correct religion .-Thus they have appropriated to themselves a great many Jewish customs, among which must be especially noticed the celebration of the Purim feast (Feast of Esther), mentioned in a former page. At this festival, in order to give it a typical meaning, they make two figures of wood, dress them in aplendid garments; and knock them one against the other, until one is broken to fragments. The broken figure is to represent Haman, the other Mordecai. In conclusion they carry this childish game so far; that the figure of the old minister of Ahasuerus is hanged. The origin of this tribe, and the period of their settlement in Hindostan is uncertain.

Nothwithstanding the difference of their worship, they believe only in one God as the Highest being, and only marry among themselves; probably they have been compelled by circumstances to forsake the belief of their fathers, to which however in some customs they have always remainedfaithful. This assertion is the more easy of credit, as in other countries in Europe, particularly in Spain and Russia, similiar facts were to be met with; thus in Russia at the beginning of the present century, thousands of Jews known under the name of Shobatnik (observers of the Sabbath), who had been compelled to apostatize for several centuries, of their own free will again embraced Judaism, the faith of their fathers. J. J. Benjamin.

Oran - Reception of the Fugitives.

The "Archives Israelites" has the following account of the reception given to the Morocqueen fugitives at Oran.

"As soon as the consistory had learned that a certain number of fugitives, coming from Gibraltar, was expected, it immediately appointed a committee of fifteen, presided over by the chief rabbi, charged with giving aid to the immigrants. The committee divided themselves into sub-committees, one of them was to receive the fugitives, another to provide them with lodgings, and a third to furnish

Friday, December 16th, the vessel conveying them was in sight. Every one was immediately at his post. 178 fugitives arrived .-By five o'clock the same day they were all housed and enjoying their first meal. On that day every family was provided with a double ration of bread for the Sabbath, so that the committee was at no expense whatever for the food of the fugitives.

Tre president of the consistory, the chief rabbi, and the committee vied with each other in attention to the wants of these unfortunates; the reception given them was most

The military administration placed at the disposal of the Jewish community convey ances in order to carry the strangers and their luggage to their respective lodgings, and offered its services on every occasion in which it could be useful to the exiles. The committee is now engaged in seeking employment for the able-bodied adults, and procuring education for the children. It is hoped that a number of these refugees will soon be taken off the list of those who have now to be supported, as they will be able to maintain themselves by their labor.

Plumbago and charcoal are composed of the same substances, carbon; but, while charcoal is very combustible, plumbago is used for making retorts to resist an intenseheat.

Several children profit very little at our School, owing to irregularity of attendance and the want of home influence to assist us.

Flirtations of Married Women.

The "innocent" flirtation of married women is one of the abominations of modern society. Even the desire for promiscuous admiration is wrong in a married woman. The love of one and his approval should be all that she should desire. Let her be ever so beautiful; it is a disgusting and appalling sight to see her decorating that beauty for public gaze; to see her seeking the attention of senseless fops around her, and rejoicing in the admiration of other eyes than those of her husbadd. Her beauty should be for him alone, not for the gaze of the fools that flutter around her. There is always among the sedate and the wise a sensation of disgust, when a married lady attempts to ensuare or entrap young men by profuse display of her charms, or an unlicensed outlay of her smiles .-Such charms and such smiles are loathe some to the indifferent beholder; the trail of the serpent is over them .- Moni-

The Poor Doctor.

The poor doctor is called from his bed on a stormy night with the stirring sum-

"Doctor want" you to come right straight away off to Bank's. His child's

"Then why do you come."

"He's poisoned. They gin him laud-

"How much have they given him?"
"Do no—a great deal, Think he won't get over it."

The Doctor pushes on through the storm-with divers mishaps on the way, and at length arrives at the house of the poisoned patient. He finds it all closed not a light is to be seen.

He knocks at the door, but no answer. He knocks furiously, and at last night cap appears at chamber window, and a woman's voice calls out-

"Who's there!" "The doctor to be sure. You sent for

"Oh, it's no matter doctor. Ephriam is better. We got a little skeered kinder- Gin him laudlum, and he sleep kinder sound, but he's waked up now."

"How much laudlum did he swallow?" "Only two drops; 'taint hurt him none. Wonderful bad storm to-night."

The doctor turns away, buttoning his overcoat under his throat, to seek his home again, and tries to whistle away mortification and anger, when the voice

"Doctor! Doctor!"

"What do you want ?" "You won't charge nothin' for the visit will you?"

Colds Cured,

It would be to the saving of human health and happiness, says Hall's Journal, and life itself, if the periodical press would never publish a recipe for any human ail-ment, which involved the taking of anything into the stomach.

Some scrap-editor characterizes it as an excellent remedy for a cough caused by a common cold, to soak an unbroken egg for forty eight hours in half a pint of vinegar, then add as much honey, break up all together, and take a teaspoonful for a dose several times a day.

If the writer of that recipe had possessed the smallest amount of common observation, he would have known that if a man begins to cough, as the result of a common cold, it is the result of nature herself attempting the cure, and she will effect in her own time, and more effectually than any man can do, if she is only let alone, and her instincts cherished.— What are those instincts? She abhors food, and craves warmth. Hence, the moment a man is satisfied that he has taken a cold, let him do three things; first, eat not an atom; second, go to bed and cover up warm in a warm room; third, drink as much cold water as he wants, or as much hot herb tea as he can, and in three cases out of four he will be almost entirely well within thirty-six hours.

If he does nothing for his cold for forty-eight hours after the cough commences, there is nothing that he can swallow that will, by possibility, do him any good, for the cold, with such a start, will run its course of about a fortnight, in spite of all that can be done, and what is swallowed in the way of physic, is a hindrance and not a good.

"Feed a cold and starves a fever," is a mischievous fallacy, A cold always brings a fever; the cold never begins to get well until the fever begind to subside; but every mouthful swallowes is that much more fuel to feed the fever, and, but for the fact that as soon as the cold is fairly seated, nature, in a kind of desperation, steps in and takes away the appetite, the commonest cold would be almost always

These things being so, the very fact of waiting forty-eight hours, gives time for the cold to fix itself in the system; for a cold does not usually cause cough until a day or two have passed, and then to wait two days longer, gives it its fullest chance to do its work before anything at all it done.

A SERMON.—The following is a funera sermon lately preached in Obio by a Buckeye clergyman: "I have been begged, importuned and entreated to preach this sermon but I don't want to do it. I never did like the man; I never knew anything good of him. He had horses and he run them; he had cocks and he fit them; I have heard that he was occasionally good at fires. The bearers will please remove the body, and the choir will sing the lollowng hymn:

"With rapture we delight to see The cuss removed."

A Yankee editor says: We dont mind recording the deaths of people without being paid for our trouble, though that is not fair; but panegyrics on the dead must be paid for—we positively cannot send people to Heaven for nothing,"

Some DIFFERENCE .- "Mrs. Smith, did you say, in the hearing of, my little girl, that I was "a great rusty cat?" "No, my dear Mrs. Jones, I said you were a great aristocrat." "O, ah! children should be careful," muttered Mrs. Jones.

A MARYSVILLE BUTCHER. -- A correspondent of the Democrat advises the citizens of Marysville to carefull inspect their meat before cooking it, for a certain butcher is picking up dead lambs and sheep on the plains and serving them up in the market. On one occasion, he found a deod lamb, partly rotten, and, cutting it in two, he threw one part away and took the other to his stall to sell to cus-

Don't Mke a Fuss.

By all the motives which have weigh with men or women, be adjured not in any case to make a fuss. In the first place, it never does a bit of good. You can accomplish all you intend, and obtain all you desire, quite as well without it, if not a little better. Nay, sometimes it actually prevents your succeding where you certainly might have done so, had you kept cool, not forewarned and forearmed everybody by a cannonade.

In the second place, it is exceedingly annoying to others; there is neither peace nor comfort in the neighborhood of a fusser. He is always plaguing you to know if you think it will rain next week, when he is going to the White Mountains; or dreading that the cars will run off the tract, or the omnibuses break down, or the hotels be crowded, or some such imaginary trouble, ever so long beforehand. And, when fairly started on such an excursion, a fusser de-stroys all the comfort and enjoyment of his unfortunate companions, and makes his own fancied torments real ones to them. Therefore his company is sedulously avoided.

Thirdly, no one sympathizes with a fuser. Even other fusers have no fellow-feeling with him. The word (and a most expressive word it is) means small worrying over trifles; and who cares a straw if Mrs. Briggs did lose her bandbox, which contained her Freuch bonnet? or if Mr. Brown's bedroom was invaded by a shaggy dog that wouldn't go out, so that it quite worried him to death, and made him quite nervous, as he pathectically declared? Nobody cares whether you or I couldn't sleep because the rats ran over our heads all night, or because we had such startled dreams, or such a bad pain in our shoulders, etc .-People do not like to have their sympathies appealed to for such nonsense.

Fourthly, it is decidedly vulgar, and incompatible with the dignity of a true lady or gentleman. It was an apt remark, that a well-bred hostess will not move a muscle, even when John upsets. the best China.

THE BANKS OF THE UNITED STATES .-The bank-note circulation of the United States, at the present time, is about $152, 000,000; of which amount $8,000,000 are in bills of the denomination of $1; $5,000, 000, of $2; $4,000,000, of $3; $16,000, 000, of $5; $16,000,000, of $10; $16,000, 000,of $20; $15,000,000,of $50; $10,000 000, of $100; $37,000,000, of $1000; and $3,000,000, of the denomination of $5000 Eve Post.

A BIG SNAKE .- A party of men from St Joseph, Mo., while out hunting in the vicinity heard one of their dogs grow! and then how! a short distance in a thicket, and on running, thither found him in the coils of a huge serpent They soon killed the snake, which measured over thirty feet in length. The poor dog was so crushed that they had to shoot him to put him out of his misery. The above, from the Hannibal Messenger, of Saturday last, is correct so far as it goes. The snake is undoubtedly the one that escaped from Madie's Mena gerie, last summer in Kansas. It measured-instead of thirty feet, forty-two feet three and a half inches in length, and was twenty-seven inches in circumference around the largest part of the body .- St. Joseph Gazette,

FIRST AND SECOND THOUGHT .- It is worthy of notice, that, while second thoughts are better in matters of judgment first thoughts are always to be preferred in matters that relate to morality. - Rush Be consistent in all things.

RICH OR POOR ? -No man can tell whether he is rich or poor by turning to his ledger. It is the heart that makes the man rich- He is rich or poor according to what he is, not according to what
